

No one else offers matter management integrated with contracts.

It's a game changer.

Contracts connected to matters.

The importance of contextual contracts

Historically, contract management software exists to edit, track changes and versions, monitor an approvals process of the document, and provides data around expiry and execution dates. However, it is disconnected from the contextual side of the job, the legal tasks performed in order to get the contract to signature. Think engagement with the represented party, negotiation with the opposing lawyer and party, meetings within a legal team to delegate tasks and find a solution to the contractual negotiation at hand.

There is often a lot of valuable information around the intentions of parties to a contract which has been created before it hits legal's desk. It is essential that this information is captured and made visible to those tasked with either drafting the contract or managing its ongoing operations post execution. With an integrated contract and matter management system you can do just that.

The screenshot displays the LawVu interface for a 'Lease agreement 2020'. It shows a document viewer with a 'Lease Agreement' document, a 'Details' sidebar with fields like 'Name', 'Address', and 'Phone', and a 'Contract details' section. A workflow diagram at the bottom shows stages: Draft, Negotiating, Approval, Signing, and Executed. A pop-up window titled 'Update contract with a new version' offers options: 'New version', 'Partially signed version', and 'Fully executed'.

Avoid disputes

Disputes require evidence - and evidence comes from good matter and contract management. Without it, disputes can end up where no corporation wants to be, in expensive and time-consuming litigation. Good matter and contract management practices mean recording interpretations of what has been said and agreed on between parties. It means filing emails and having all relevant contractual information filed and stored. It is best to prepare oneself for the future.
